

Bermuda Quadrangle A Beautiful Life

JD211

DOLBY SYSTEM

Side A:

Girls They Go Wild Over Me
Easy and Slow
Firing the Mauretania
The Cowboy's Lament
Where We'll Never Grow Old
Overseas In India (Sara Morgan)

Side B:

Blow the Man Down
Someone to Love Me
Did-Na-Doo
Granny's Old Arm Chair
Workin' On a Push Boat
The Wind and The Rain
A Beautiful Life

Bermuda Quadrangle

Jeff Davis: Vocal, banjo, guitar, fiddle, mandolin, piano

Jerry Epstein: Vocal, concertina, piano

David Jones: Vocal

Jeff Warner: Vocal, guitar, banjo, concertina

All songs traditional except

Overseas in India, © Sara Morgan, 1985

Bermuda Quadrangle

A Beautiful Life

Minstrel
JD211

NOTES:

Girls They Go Wild is from the singing of Mac Benford, banjo scholar and performer from Ithaca, NY. Sheet music that has turned up since we learned it tells us that the song is entitled: "They Go Wild, Simply Wild, Over Me", written by Joe McCarthy and Fred Fisher in 1917, "Respectfully dedicated to our pal, Ed Morton." It is representative of the many "Tin Pan Alley" songs that worked their way into oral tradition.

Easy and Slow seems to be a Belfast street song. It has been published in the Scone Ceilidh Song Book with no credit. Joe Hickerson has informed us that it is attributed to Dominic Behan.

The Fireman's Lament or Firing the Mauretania was entered in English Shanteyman Stan Hugill's column, "The Bosun's Locker", in Spin, The Folksong Magazine (Vol. 1, #9, 1962). His notes in their entirety: "Words collected and arranged by Redd Sullivan of the 'Thameside 4', sometime fireman himself. Tune: variant of 'Paddy Works on the Railway'." The original date in the first line was 1924. Jeff Warner changed it to 1904 to conform to our concept of when a Mauretania would have had a coal-fired engine.

We learned The Cowboy's Lament from singer and folklorist Dick Swain. It is found in the 1908 volume, Songs of the Cowboys by N. Howard Thorp, but without the "Roll On" chorus. That chorus is found with the song in Jerry Silverman's Folksong Encyclopedia, and we agree with Dick that it belongs.

Where We'll Never Grow Old is from Smith's Sacred Singers, recorded in Atlanta in 1926 and reissued on Columbia Records: The Smithsonian Collection of Classic Country Music, edited by Bill Malone (1981).

Overseas in India, originally titled "Home, Boys, Home", is from a poem in an old magazine, set to music by Sara Morgan.

Blow the Man Down is the most complete, most colorful and randiest version extant of this capstan shanty. Where John "Fud" Benson of Newport, RI learned it, we don't know. We'll have to ask him someday.

Someone to Love Me is from the singing of Joe

Heany, sean nos (old style) singer from the West coast of Ireland. It is a version of "The Prisoner's Song", the first million selling country music record in America, sung by Vernon Dalhart in 1924.

Did-Na-Doo we learned from Indiana singer and folklorist Dillon Bustin. He in turn got it from Mary Wheeler's book Steamboatin' Days. Like many songs that Dillon sings, this one has a touch of his personality, coloring the printed source material.

Granny's Old Arm Chair, a classic bit of fantasy, is one of the most universally known of songs from the heyday of the English Music Halls. Jeff Warner's parents even collected it in the Appalachian Mountains!

Workin' on a Push Boat we learned also from Dillon Bustin, but we have no idea of his source. Other versions are well known, but we know of no other with a tune at all like this one.

The Wind and the Rain is a version of the ancient ballad of "The Two Sisters" from traditional Virginia/North Carolina singer Kilby Snow.

A Beautiful Life is from the singing of Amish sisters Emma and Mary Yoder of Charm, Ohio. It was collected by Jeff Goehring of The Red Mule String Band.

MINSTREL RECORDINGS

35-41 72nd Street
Jackson Heights, NY 11372
(718) 426-8555
Write for free catalog.

Engineering: Don Wade, Jerry Epstein
Photograph: Clarice Kjerulff